“Training is an integral part of PRP. Being a board certified urologist who specializes in erectile dysfunction and urinary incontinence, hands on instruction gives a realistic approach for the use of PRP in your practice. Studio PRP is superior in marketing, didactics, and staff guidance that offers the best science and equipment.”

“Recently I attended the Studio PRP hands on group training and I can say without reservation it is the best organized small group training I have ever attended. The staff are professional and overly helpful with all aspects of the event. Dr. Lisbeth Roy is an excellent instructor with an obviously comprehensive knowledge of all aspects of the procedures.”

“We attended the group course and were truly impressed. The course is set up so that you receive all didactics first followed by a full day of hands training. The Studio PRP trainers were there to guide you and teaches each procedure thoroughly so that you can go back to your practice and use these innovative modalities immediately. I have participated training courses in the past and found Studio PRP's approach to be the best.”

Equipment – Not all PRP is created Equal

Perhaps the most important decision you will make that effects the patient outcome is the PRP processing equipment you choose to use in your practice. Patient results depend upon the quality of PRP. The Science behind the double spin protocol used by Studio PRP offers the highest deliverable platelet concentration, rich in monocytes, low in granulocytes and red blood cells resulting in the most desirable PRP aliquot. Studio PRP is committed to the science of PRP and will only offer the best equipment currently available in the marketplace.

Training – A Practice Game Changer

Training begins with didactics, introducing the history of PRP, mechanism of action, review of articles published, clinical applications and a how to talk about PRP to your patients and staff.

The next day is a full day of hands-on clinical training. During this day you will learn all you need to know to treat patients, understand the equipment and tools necessary to process PRP, how to inform the patient about these procedures and follow up treatment plans. You and your staff are encouraged to participate as patients, receiving procedures during training so you can speak candidly with your patients.

Private Training – Physician's Undivided Attention

By far the best hands on training you can receive is “Private PRP Training” at your office. Not only will you receive hands on experience in the environment you are most comfortable in, you will have the physician's undivided attention. But there's much more! During private training, your complete office staff participates in all aspects of the training, making them instantly comfortable with the procedure and patient process. Furthermore, you will be performing the procedures on your very own patients, allowing you to follow up on your patients and to generate revenue on training day. In most cases, this training day revenue covers your out of pocket cost for the training fees.

This exceptional one on one approach offers you and your team the confidence you will need to implement these PRP procedures immediately in your practice. PRIVATE training at your office eliminates many obstacles and the process is quite simple.

If you're interested in growing your practice exponentially and positively impacting the lives of your patients, Studio PRP can help.
